Sheet 2 — Keywords & the Name

This is what one sheet looks like when it comes back. Every sheet gets the same four parts, then a one-page summary closes the review.

THE STUDENT'S SHEET (FICTIONAL, MADE FOR THIS SAMPLE)

Five-member group, debut. Keywords: STATIC — TV snow, hair lifted by charge, a frame that flickers once
NIGHT SWIM — slipping out after midnight RUNAWAY — leaving town together
PAPER MOON — dreamy, nostalgic
Name funnel: nine candidates → three → one. Losers' reasons recorded for eight of them. Final name: checks passed for search, duplicates and pronunciation. Typography box left empty.

WHAT PASSES

1. STATIC is defined as something a camera can see. That definition will carry straight into your shot list and your styling rules.
2. Your funnel keeps the losers' reasons. One candidate lost on search, with the results page attached. That is the record a label keeps.

WHAT TO FIX, AND WHY

1. NIGHT SWIM and RUNAWAY do the same job: escape, at night. Two keywords on one axis leave your set with three directions instead of four. Sheet rule: each keyword holds a different role.
2. PAPER MOON is defined by a mood, not an image. A mood can't be photographed, so the stylist and the photographer will each guess. Lesson 2.1: a good keyword is one a camera can shoot.
3. The final name skipped the typography check. Without it, Sheet 4 finds out late that the name breaks in a logo. Funnel rule: all four checks before a name is final.

SUGGESTED DIRECTION

Keep STATIC as the anchor. Swap RUNAWAY for a keyword that holds a material, a surface the members touch in every cut. Redefine PAPER MOON as one object and one light source. Then set the name in three typefaces and keep the one that still reads at thumbnail size.

ROUND TWO, I'LL CHECK

Do your four keywords now point to four different spaces on Sheet 3? I'll read Sheets 2 and 3 side by side.

The student, the group and this sheet are fictional, made only for this sample. Real reviews follow the same four parts for all eight sheets, plus a one-page summary: three strengths, three fixes in order, one next step.
